UBS and AGSM Executive Programs – Partnering To Support Professionals in Transition

It starts with you!

Are you a professional re-entering the work force? Would you like to jump-start that transition? UBS and AGSM Executive Programs have a program designed to support people returning to the workforce after a career break.

Immerse yourself in today's world of business. Catch up on the latest academic research and corporate developments. Update critical business skills, with a focus on transition strategies. Create an action plan for your re-entry into the workforce.

Career Comeback helps participants understand and plan for a life transition, while addressing the business realities facing returning professional people.

Following its successful launch at Wharton in March 2007, and the first Sydney Program in November 2007, UBS is pleased to offer the Career Comeback Program again in Sydney. The next program starts on 15 October 2008.

AGSM
EXECUTIVE PROGRAMS

Focus

The program's unique curriculum was designed with your success in mind. You will:

- Update: Re-entrants to the workforce must contend with a changed business environment, including technological advancements, regulatory changes and the effects of mergers and acquisitions. In conjunction with AGSM Executive Programs, UBS brings together business updates from experts in economics, finance and leadership.
- Develop: Recent studies suggest that people face a number of unique obstacles when returning to the workforce, including a diminished personal network and increased family responsibilities. Through teamwork and individual mentoring, the Career Comeback program provides an environment to explore and discuss how to overcome these issues, enabling participants to develop a considered action plan for re-entering the workforce.
- Network: Participants meet with business leaders, mentors and faculty and build relationships with other participants – all with the express aim of creating a learning community – an important part of the program.
